NATION'S MEDIA NETWORK OPPORTUNITIES IN BANGLADESH

The emergence of satellite television and the spread of the Internet in the last one and a half decades have changed Bangladesh's media landscape. Twenty-nine satellite television stations have reached viewers across the country, while faster Internet services drive people, particularly the young generation, towards ever-increasing online news services and social media. The immensely popular Facebook has become a growing source of information for citizens. The availability of smartphones is acting as a catalyst in this new, fascinating trend.

Satellite broadcasting has brought a whole new world to people. The news-based television stations that came in quick succession to bring updates and live telecasts of events are now considered the dominant media. Two recent media surveys show a higher consumption (over 80 percent) of television in the country, as shown below.

Radio is not lagging and is making its presence felt in the media landscape by introducing both commercial FM and community radio stations. A country that had only one state-run radio station before 1999 now boasts 35 radio stations.

This 198 Bangladesh Ultimate Massive Mass Media Campaign is an Ike Lewuma Special guide that acts as the key and the gateway towards exploring the most diverse field, which is among the leading sectors in media networks. Get to explore media network opportunities in Bangladesh and have a chance to experience the taste of media networks with professions.

UNTAPPED MEDIA SECTORS IN BANGLADESH

Increased Internet accessibility has brought another dimension to Bangladesh's media landscape, increasing digitalization. Most leading newspapers have web portals, Facebook pages, Twitter accounts, and a presence on YouTube. Some newspapers outside of the capital have their online news portals.

Most television stations have separate digital news services. For example, the digital versions of Channel I and NTV are continually coming up with news, views, and interviews. They are in fair competition with the newspapers' online services.

Prior to the expansion of television stations and the Internet, people used to rely on newspapers to access authentic news. Now the country has numerous newspapers, TV stations, and online news portals. Unfortunately, though, the standard of journalism is very low. Media is seen to be less credible, mainly because of the owners, editors, and journalists' political affiliation.

However, this is a rapid development period for Bangladesh's media market, with many outlets enjoying both profitability and influence in an expanding market. Over the past decade, large privately-owned Bangladeshi corporations have moved into the market. Much of the national media is now in the hands of the country's biggest corporate groups.

BANGLADESH GEOGRAPHIC SECTORS

Communication in Bangladesh is based on Telephone, mobile communication, TV Broadcast, Radio, Internet, etc. There are currently six mobile operators in Bangladesh: Grameenphone – Joint venture ownership 62%Telenor and 38%Grameen Telecom. These are spread the demographic regions of Rangpur, Rajshahi, Dhaka, Mymensingh, Sylhet, Khulna, Barisal, and Chittagong.

There are two crucial media infrastructure areas which have emerged as viable investment area over the last few years. With both the public sector and private sector putting in high importance for last-mile connectivity across the country and creating sustainable demand for data connectivity, particularly in non-metropolitan and rural areas, investment in ICT Infrastructure promises to be an essential both local and international investment. In the last few years, apart from cell phone operators, the data connectivity sector (Wi-Max, NDN, etc.) has attracted US$ 300 million, of which over 30% are from foreign sources such as the UK's Augere Group. However, long term in nature, these investments are a minimum investment size in most cases.

MOST ACTIVE MEDIA GROUPS IN BANGLADESH

Prothom Alo is the most circulated and influential Bengali daily that provides news from two separate dimensions—print and online portals in Bengali and English. The online portal of Prothom Alo is the number one Bangladeshi website in the world. This portal is accessed by an average of 1.2 million visitors from different countries and territories worldwide, with over 7 million page views every month. The newspaper has more than 13 million Facebook followers, nearly double what it was three years ago. A large number of people, around 1.3 million, are following it on Twitter. The English version of Prothom Alo has 382,000 followers on Facebook.

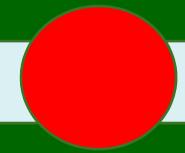

The Daily Star went online in 2006 and was developing slowly. However, it got a right lift in the last five years as the digital section has been growing significantly by engaging more staff and generating diversified content, including interactive and multimedia, to attract local and international readers.

According to the newspaper, its website had over one million active users till January 2018, with over 70,000 daily active users. Most of the readers remain connected through their mobile. The daily has around 2.7 million followers on Facebook, 460,000 Twitter followers, and 50,000 subscribers on Youtube. The addition of local-language stories has attracted readers too.

The most notable title in this trend is the tabloid Daily Sun, which had an average 508 000 daily sales, up from 452 000. Continuing with this trend, sales for Daily Sun have increased to 513 291 daily. City Press was up from 185 000 to 201 000 average weekly sales in 2008, and in 2009 it was circulating at 195 150 weekly sales. However, Beeld sales have been on a gradual decline.

When it comes to weekly newspapers the Sunday times, Soccer Laduma and Sunday SUN have the largest numbers of readers respectively.

MAGAZINES

South Africa media networks have different magazine plans and genres. Some magazines are produced weekly, every fortnight or monthly. Drum has the largest average reader numbers followed by YOU, Huisgenoot and MOVE!.

According to All media and product Survey (AMPS), the Cosmopolitan magazine also has a wide readership audience and offers a great deal for publications and advertisement.

BILLBOARDS

Over the past few years, the billboard industry in South Africa has greatly evolved with the introduction of digital billboards. The impact of digital billboards is greatly felt since most media companies have shifted from the old static panel to the new billboards.

The area with the most demand is the Gauteng Province region, even though advertisers target Johannesburg, Pretoria and Cape Town. The dominant billboard companies in SA include Alive Advertising, Epic Outdoor, PRIMEDIA, and Tractor Outdoor among others.

SATELLITE TV

This is a prepaid service and the largest broadcaster is DSTV whose members pay for the subscription monthly. The most popular channels include super sport, Channel 0, VuzuTv

STREAMING SERVICES

ETV

Unlike state owned media, ETv offers unbiased news highlights and making it popular.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS
